- Shares of Vodafone jumped after the company reported better-than-expected fiscal fourth-quarter results and announced that it was maintaining the dividend at current level. More than 40 FTSE 100 companies have reduced or cut their dividends since the emergence of the COVID-19 pandemic. Vodafone's mobile services revenue and free cash flow exceeded consensus estimates, while profitability was in-line with forecasts. Management withdrew its fiscal year 2021 EBITDA guidance due to a lack of visibility on top-line trends but reiterated the outlook for free cash flow.

2. Franklin Mutual European Fund was launched as a sub-fund of Franklin Templeton Investment Funds, a Luxembourg-registered SICAV, on 03/04/2000. The A (acc) share class in euros for this sub-fund was launched on 31/12/2001.

3. Net Returns (NR) include income net of tax withholding when dividends are paid.

- Shares of ING bounced back with the broad European banking sector on indications that oil prices were recovering and the economy would begin to reopen. Earlier in the period, the Netherlands-based bank released quarterly financial results that exceeded consensus forecasts. A decline in first-quarter net profit came in better than expected.
- Shares of Standard Chartered dipped in the last days of the month on concerns about a resumption of tensions between China and the United States. The London-based bank operates primarily in developing countries, and Hong Kong is one of its key markets. China announced its intention to enact a sweeping security law in Hong Kong that would restrict its autonomy. In response, the United States said Hong Kong's special trade status would be revoked, which would result in higher tariffs on the region's exports to the United States, restrict US-Hong Kong travel and eliminate free currency exchange.

Outlook & Strategy

- It has become increasingly apparent from our first-quarter earnings conference calls that April was probably the bottom of the economic downturn. With factories reopening across the region, the shape of the recovery is open for debate: V-shape, or more recently, the reverse square-root shape in which the economy comes back quickly but stabilises at a point below pre-COVID levels. From our perspective, we have priced in the supply shock. Whether there is a demand shock, or if the massive fiscal stimulus has been supportive, is still unknown.
- The European Central bank, like its counterparts, has interpreted its mandate widely and is doing everything it can to support the region's economies and markets. Despite the German Constitutional Court's decision that ECB action needs to meet the test of proportionality, the central bank was clear in its response that it is answerable to the European Parliament.
- As the policy response to the pandemic begins working through the economy, the outlook for European banks and the ability of companies to pay dividends is shifting. The region's banks have become conduits for distributing capital to corporates. By contrast, American companies have primarily issued bonds to meet their capital needs. Consequently, we are increasingly concerned about the profitability of European financials as governments rely on them for broader social purposes. Also, Europe's reputation for superior dividend yields, compared with the United States, has come under pressure. Companies such as Royal Dutch Shell have reduced payouts, and many others have eliminated them to conserve cash.
- The pandemic has highlighted structural weaknesses between Europe's haves and the have-nots. Countries such as Italy, which is still recovering from the Global Financial Crisis, was hit hard by COVID-19 and lack the fiscal wherewithal to finance their recovery. As such, the recent announcement of the European Recovery Fund is probably one of the most significant COVID-related relief actions. Depending upon the structure of the final agreement, it could represent the first steps in the fiscal integration of the region, as well as lead to the euro being considered a safe-haven currency.
- As long-term investors, we can weather turbulence and look for it to provide opportunities to acquire shares in good franchises at attractive valuations. We remain disciplined in our approach and are committed to buying companies based on fundamentals, active engagement with management teams and a keen focus on cash flow and valuation. While the recent instability has, at times, been unnerving, it's important to remember that fluctuations – sometime extreme – are inherent to investing in risk assets, and the market historically rewards investors who take a long-term perspective.
